Show Don't Tell

How to Build Trust Through Story

Claims are forgotten. Stories are believed.

SOFIA KAKKAVA

THE PROBLEM

Anyone can say they're an expert
Nobody believes it anymore

The people who build real trust online don't tell their audience they're good. They show them:

- Through stories.
- Through specifics.
- Through moments that prove it without a single claim.

Telling = claiming your expertise.

Showing = proving it through a specific moment, mistake, or result.

The difference is not what you say

It's what you prove.

TELLING → What most people do

- "I've helped hundreds of clients lose weight."
  → Generic claim. No proof.
- "I have 10 years of coaching experience."
  → Numbers without context.
- "My clients get amazing results."
  → Vague. Unbelievable.
- "I'm passionate about helping people."
  → Everyone says this.
- "I'm an expert in my field."
  → Self-declared. Means nothing.

SHOWING → What builds real trust

- "My client lost 8kg training 3 days a week."
  → Specific. Believable. Real.
- "Week 1 she quit sugar. Week 8 she stopped trying."
  → Honest. Relatable. Human.
- "I changed one question. Close rate doubled."
  → Proof through action.
- "The moment I stopped giving advice and started asking."
  → Story beats statement.
- "She said nobody had ever explained it like that."
  → Result through someone else's words.

THE 3 STORYTELLING APPROACHES

Three ways to show without telling

Pick one. Use it today.

01

THE MOMENT

One specific moment that changed something.

Use when: something happened in a session, in your work, in your life that taught you something real.

1. Start exactly where you were.
2. What happened. What you noticed.
3. What changed because of it.
4. What it means for them.

"I was halfway through a coaching session when she said something that stopped me completely."

02

THE MISTAKE

What went wrong and what you learned.

Use when: you got it wrong before you got it right. Honesty builds more trust than perfection.

1. What you believed or did before.
2. What happened when it didn't work.
3. What you changed.
4. What you know now.

"For the first two years I gave every client the same program. I thought consistency was the answer."

03

THERESULT

What happened for someone you worked with.

Use when: a client or student got a result. Show the journey not just the outcome.

1. Where they started. Specifically.
2. What the real problem was.
3. What shifted for them.
4. Where they are now.

"She came to me after failing the same plan three times. She didn't need a new plan."

Example: Business Coach

→ three stories, same expertise, completely different posts.

THE MOMENT Business Coach

"I was halfway through a session when she said: 'I already know what I need to do. I just don't do it. I stopped.

That sentence changed how I coach.
Most people don't need more information.

They need someone to help them close the gapbetween knowing and doing.
That's the only thing I focus on now."

THE MISTAKE Business Coach

"For the first two years I sent every client the same onboarding pack.

I thought structure was the answer. Turns out I was solving my problem, not theirs.

Now I spend the first session asking one question: What does your life actually look like right now?

Everything I build comes from that answer."

THE RESULT Business Coach

"She came to me after abandoning the same business plan three times.

She didn't need a new plan.She needed to understand why she kept stopping at the same point.

We found it in 20 minutes.
She launched 6 weeks later.

The plan hadn't changed.
Her relationship to it had."

Story starters

- These are sample openers not full posts. Take one and write the rest in your own words.

BUSINESS COACH

THE MOMENT

"I was in the middle of a discovery call when she said something I wasn't expecting."

THE MISTAKE

"For the first year I gave every client a 90-day action plan. Then I looked at the results."

THE RESULT

"She came to me after her third failed launch. She didn't need a new strategy."

FITNESS PRO

THE MOMENT

"My client was doing everything right. Training 4 times a week. Eating well. Nothing was moving."

THE MISTAKE

"I used to build the most comprehensive programs. 6 days a week. Full nutrition plan. Clients quit by week 3."

THE RESULT

"She'd started over 11 times in 2 years. This time was different and it wasn't the plan that changed."

ONLINE EDUCATOR

THE MOMENT

"I was reviewing my course analytics when I saw where students were dropping off. It was always the same place."

THE MISTAKE

"I spent 6 months building the most comprehensive course I'd ever created. Completion rate: 12%."

THE RESULT

"He enrolled, disappeared for 3 weeks, came back and finished in 4 days. Here's what changed."

HR CONSULTANT

THE MOMENT

"I was doing an exit interview when she said something I'd heard before. Almost word for word."

THE MISTAKE

"I used to focus on replacing people faster. I thought speed was the answer. It wasn't."

THE RESULT

"They'd lost 4 senior people in 6 months. By the time we finished, they hadn't lost anyone in a year."

HEALTH COACH

THE MOMENT

"She knew exactly what to eat when to sleep, and how to manage her stress. She still couldn't make it stick."

THE MISTAKE

"I used to give every client the same meal plan framework. Clean, simple, proven. Most quit by week 2."

THE RESULT

"She'd tried every approach. Keto. Intermittent fasting. Hard. But this time we didn't change the food."

What stops a story from landing.

TOO VAGUE

"A client came to me struggling."

Struggling with what? Who? When? The vagueness kills the trust. Specific details are what make stories believable.

NO SPECIFIC TRIGGER

"I realised one day that my clients needed something different."

Realised how? From what? When? The trigger is the most important part of the story.

Without it the shift feels made up. Name the exact moment, the exact conversation, the exact number that changed everything.

MAKING IT ABOUT YOU

The story starts with your client's problem but ends with how brilliant you are.

The reader stops feeling seen and starts feeling sold to.

The moment the spotlight moves from them to you
→ you lose them.

SKIPPING THE STRUGGLE

You go straight from the problem to the result.

The reader sees the transformation but misses the part they actually need:

- The doubt.
- The wrong turn.
- The moment you almost gave up.

That's where the connection lives. Not in the outcome.

Two prompts. Every post covered.

PROMPT 1: WRITE THE STORY POST

Use when: you have a moment, mistake, or result and want to turn it into a post

"I want to write a story post.

Here is what happened:

[Describe the moment, mistake, or result in your own words — even just bullet points]

Write this as a [MOMENT / MISTAKE / RESULT] story.

Structure:

— Start with the specific situation.

— Show what happened or what changed.

— End with what it means for the reader.

Keep it short, honest, and conversational.

Sound like a real person not a brand."

SAMPLE:
"I want to write a story post. Here is what happened: My client had been trying the same plan for 3 months with no results. In our first session she said she already knew what to do — she just couldn't do it. Write this as a Moment story..."

PROMPT 2: MAKE IT MORE SPECIFIC

Use when: you have a story draft but it feels too vague or generic

"Here is my story post: [PASTE YOUR DRAFT]. Make it more specific by:

1. Adding one concrete detail (a number, a timeframe, a specific moment)

2. Making the struggle feel more real (what exactly was happening?)

3. Removing any claim that sounds like self-promotion

4. Making the ending land harder (what does it actually mean for the reader?) Keep my voice.

Don't make it sound polished or corporate."

SAMPLE:
"Here is my story post: [paste draft]. Make it more specific. Add one concrete detail. Make the struggle feel more real. Remove anything that sounds like self-promotion. Keep my voice."

YOUR DAILY WORKFLOW

One post. One point. One piece of trust built.

1

Pick your approach
Moment, Mistake, or Result. Choose the one that feels most natural today.

2

Find the specific detail
A number. A name. A timeframe. A sentence someone said. One real detail makes the whole story believable.

3

Write the opening line
Start exactly where the story begins. Not with context. Not with a claim. With the moment.

4

Show the struggle
What was really happening? What wasn't working? Don't skip this! It's what people connect with.

5

Land the shift
What changed? What did you learn? What does it mean for the reader? One clear takeaway.

6

Post it
A real story that goes out beats a perfect story that stays in your drafts.

Claims are forgotten. Stories are believed. Show — don't tell.
