Show How You Think

The Content That Builds Real Authority

People follow those whose thinking they trust.

SOFIA KAKKAVA

Most content shares conclusions
The best content shares thinking

Anyone can share a tip. Anyone can share an opinion.
Tips are everywhere. Opinions are everywhere.

What's rare is watching someone think.

- Showing the reasoning behind the take.
- Showing why you believe what you believe.
- Showing how you arrived at the conclusion not just the conclusion itself.

That's what builds real authority.
Not the answer. The thinking behind the answer.

SHARING A CONCLUSION

"Recovery matters more than training."

True. But everyone says it. Nobody remembers it.

SHOWING YOUR THINKING

"I used to measure progress by training volume.
Then one client showed me her sleep data.
Everything I believed about results changed."

It's not about being transparent.

It's about being trustworthy.

01 Show the reasoning

Don't just say what you believe. Show why you believe it.

- What did you observe
- What changed your mind?
- What did you test?

02 Show the tension

Real thinking isn't clean.

- Show the moment you were wrong.
- The thing you used to believe.
- The mistake that taught you.

That's where trust lives.

03 Show the process

Walk them through:

- How you arrive at decisions.
- How you work with a client.
- How you solve a specific problem.

The process is the proof.

04 Show the nuance

The best thinkers don't deal in absolutes.

'It depends' is often the most authoritative answer

If you can explain what it depends on.

Same topic.
Completely different authority

The conclusion is the same. The thinking is what separates them.

Niche	Conclusion Only	SHOWING THE THINKING
BUSINESS COACH	"Consistency beats strategy every time."	"For two years I kept telling clients they needed a better strategy. Then I noticed something. The clients who got results weren't the ones with the best plans. They were the ones who kept doing the same simple thing. Week after week. Even when it felt boring. I stopped selling strategy. I started teaching consistency. Same clients. Completely different results."
FITNESS PRO	"Training less can give you better results."	"I had a client training 6 days a week. No progress for 3 months. I cut her to 3 days. She was furious. I was nervous. By week 4 she was stronger than she'd been all year. I used to think more effort meant more results. Now I know effort without recovery is just damage."
HEALTH COACH	"Willpower is not the answer to habit change."	"Every client I've ever worked with knew exactly what to do. Every single one. They had the plan. They had the motivation, at least on Monday. By Thursday it was gone. I spent years trying to fix their willpower. Then I realized I was solving the wrong problem. Willpower runs out. Environment doesn't."

HOW TO WRITE A SHOW YOUR THINKING POST

The framework. Step by step.

01. Start with what you used to believe

The old belief. The conventional wisdom.
The thing most people in your industry still say.

"I used to believe that the more sessions a client did, the faster their results would come."

02. Show what changed your mind

A specific moment. A piece of data. A client. A conversation.
Something real not an abstract epiphany.

"Then one client showed me her recovery data after a week of 5 training sessions versus 3. The 3-session week had better strength numbers."

03. Show the tension or the struggle

It wasn't easy to change your thinking. Show that. The doubt.
The resistance. The thing you had to let go of.

"I resisted the idea for months. Fewer sessions felt like I was giving them less value."

04. Land the new belief

What you now know. What replaced the old belief.
The cleaner the better.

"Now I know: less training with better recovery produces better results every time."

05. Make it about them

End with what this means for the reader.
One question or one direction. Their turn.

"What does your recovery protocol actually look like?"

What stops thinking content from landing

JUMPING TO THE CONCLUSION

You skip straight to what you now believe without showing what you used to believe or what changed.

The journey is the content not the destination.

MAKING IT TOO NEAT

Real thinking is messy.
Real change is uncomfortable.

If your thinking post sounds too polished → it sounds fake.

Show the doubt. Show the resistance.

STILL SOUNDING LIKE AN EXPERT

Thinking content works because it's humble.

You're showing how you got it wrong before you got it right.

Stay in the story not on the pedestal.

MAKING IT TOO LONG

The thinking should be tight.

Every sentence moves it forward. If a line doesn't add to the journey. Cut it.

Two prompts. Every post covered.

PROMPT 1: WRITE THE THINKING POST

Use when: you have a belief shift and want to turn it into a post

"I want to write a post that shows how my thinking changed.
Here is what I used to believe: [WRITE WHAT YOU BELIEVED BEFORE]
Here is what changed my mind: [DESCRIBE THE SPECIFIC MOMENT, CLIENT, DATA, OR CONVERSATION]
Here is what I now believe: [WRITE YOUR NEW BELIEF]

Write this as a thinking post.
Show the journey not just the conclusion.
Include the tension and the doubt.

End with one specific question for the reader.
Sound like a real person not a brand."

PROMPT 2: MAKE IT LESS POLISHED

Use when: your thinking post sounds too clean or too expert

"Here is my thinking post: [PASTE YOUR DRAFT].
It sounds too polished. Make it more real by:

1. Adding the doubt or resistance I felt before I changed my mind
2. Making the trigger more specific (a name, a number, a sentence someone said)
3. Removing any sentence that sounds like an expert statement
4. Making it sound like I'm talking to one specific person not an audience

Keep my voice.
Make it feel like a real moment not a lesson."

SOFIA KAKKAVA

You now write like an authority

Five days. Five skills.
Every single one designed to make your content impossible to ignore.

You don't need to be the most experienced person in your industry.
You need to be the clearest.

The people who win online aren't the ones who know the most.
They're the ones whose thinking you can follow.

"The skills don't matter if the content stays in your drafts. Write it. Post it. Then write the next one."
